INTRODUCTION

The Arizona Coalition to End Sexual and Domestic Violence (ACESDV) presents the Arizona Domestic Violence Fatality Report. Annually, ACESDV tracks domestic violence related fatalities of women, men, and children in Arizona and has produced fatality reports since 2005. From 2005-2014, at least 1,139 people in Arizona have lost their lives in domestic violence related incidents. These fatalities represent a small fraction of those individuals in Arizona who use violence in intimate and familial relationships. They also remind us of the potential lethality in domestic violence.

In 2014, the National Network to End Domestic Violence conducted its annual survey of domestic violence services. The survey revealed that in one day in Arizona 1,244 survivors accessed services (NNEDV, 2015). Additionally, 171 requests for services went unmet, with 90% of those requests being for emergency shelter or transitional housing (NNEDV, 2015). ACESDV’s Legal Advocacy Hotline tracks the number of calls for information and referrals related to family court, protection orders, legal assistance, victims’ rights, safety planning, shelters/safe housing, and more. In 2014 the hotline reported 2,431 calls received, with approximately 36% coming from survivors and concerned friends and family members. The numbers in these two reports demonstrate the ongoing need for services for survivors of domestic violence and the communities in which they live.

This report focuses on domestic violence related fatalities in calendar year 2014 and identifies characteristics of these cases. In order to influence community and policy decisions, inform responses to domestic violence, and enhance services to Arizonans, we must closely examine the circumstances leading up to and surrounding these fatalities. Use of the terms victim and survivor depends on the source; for example, Arizona state law uses victim, whereas the National Domestic Violence Hotline uses survivor. Individuals who lost their lives will be referred to as victim or decedent, and for content unattributed to a specific source, the term survivor will be used. The purpose of this report is to provide as accurate a description as possible of the main events and circumstances related to each fatality, to help Arizona communities create and increase opportunities for education and intervention, and to encourage community members to support local efforts to prevent and end domestic violence. However, this brief report cannot fully capture the individuality of each victim or the total impact of their loss on the community.

HOW DATA WAS COLLECTED

Five years ago, ACESDV transitioned from using clippings from newspaper and other periodicals to Meltwater News, an online media monitoring service. Meltwater News conducts a topical keyword search utilizing Boolean logic, which allows for the combination of keywords with modifiers such as ‘and’, ‘not’ and ‘or’ to further produce additional germane results. The information for this report was gathered from local and national media sources using specific keywords including, but not limited to: violence, shooting, homicide, murder, assault, killed, stabbed, mother, father, brother, sister, husband, wife, boyfriend, girlfriend, uncle, aunt, cousin, teen, and child.

Arizona Revised Statute (A.R.S.) 13-3601 defines domestic violence by the relationship between the victim and defendant (perpetrator) and the type of crime(s) committed. The following is a list of qualifying relationships included in statute:

- The relationship between the victim and the defendant is one of marriage or former marriage or of persons residing or having resided in the same household.
- The victim and the defendant have a child in common.
- The victim or the defendant is pregnant by the other party.
• The victim is related to the defendant or the defendant’s spouse by blood or court order as a parent, grandparent, child, grandchild, brother or sister by marriage as a parent-in-law, grandparent-in-law, stepchild, step-grandchild, brother-in-law or sister-in-law.

• The victim is a child who resides or has resided in the same household as the defendant and is related by blood to a former spouse of the defendant or to a person who resides or has resided in the same household as the defendant.

• The relationship between the victim and the defendant is currently or was previously a romantic or sexual relationship. The following factors may be considered in determining whether the relationship between the victim and the defendant is currently or was previously a romantic or sexual relationship:
  (a) The type of relationship.
  (b) The length of the relationship.
  (c) The frequency of the interaction between the victim and the defendant.
  (d) If the relationship has terminated, the length of time since the termination.

In Arizona, domestic violence itself is not a crime, but rather a series of crimes described in A.R.S. § 13-3601, and if the parties involved meet the relationship requirements. For instance, an assault on a stranger will be charged as assault, but an assault by a perpetrator against someone they are in a romantic or sexual relationship with can be charged as assault with a domestic violence tag. The only exception to this is aggravated domestic violence, which can be charged when a perpetrator commits three acts of domestic violence offenses within a period of eighty-four months (A.R.S. § 13-3601.02). There are currently thirty crimes that can be tagged as domestic violence.

News articles were read, considered to be “domestic violence related” and included in the 2014 list if they met the criteria of the relationship test as outlined in A.R.S. § 13-3601, or if the fatality occurred within the context of domestic violence. This included instances when perpetrators, bystanders, co-workers, friends, neighbors, animals/pets, or others were killed during a domestic violence incident.

Although Arizona’s laws set specific parameters as to what constitutes domestic violence, survivors, advocates, and researchers have long recognized a more inclusive definition of domestic violence. Professionals generally recognize that domestic/intimate partner violence is a pattern of behavior that includes the use or threat of violence and intimidation for the purpose of gaining power and control over another person (Stark, 2007).

While this method of data collection creates a fairly comprehensive list of domestic violence related fatalities, the data contained in this report is limited. The information contained in this report, in part, is a reflection of the details and information about each death that was available immediately after the incident and in the days and weeks following it. The yearly fatality lists and corresponding annual reports produced by ACESDV may be subject to revisions if additional information about these fatalities becomes available.

Many incidents of domestic violence are not reported to law enforcement and some fatalities may not receive media coverage. For instance, incidents occurring on Tribal lands or in “Indian country” are not only underreported, but they are not regularly covered by mainstream media sources. Native women residing in Indian Country experience domestic violence and physical assault at rates which far exceed women of other groups and locations. In fact, estimates of these rates are as much as 50% higher than the next most victimized demographic (U.S. Department of Justice, 2004). Domestic violence fatality review in Indian Country is complex, as many of the guidelines and protocols developed by local fatality review teams can vary based on respective federal and tribal environments. At this time, data on violence against women in Indian Country does not exist since no federal agency, Indian agency, or other organization systematically collects this...
Information. However, findings from recent work done in the area of Native American domestic violence fatality review will be discussed later in this report. ACESDV appreciates the ongoing partnership with the Federal Bureau of Investigation to collect information on domestic violence related fatalities on Tribal lands. However, because so many cases from Tribal communities were not captured in previous years, this report is unable to compare and discuss trends in this area. Gathering data for fatalities in Indian Country continues to present challenges and is a gap in this report.

Two other groups who may be underrepresented in this report are same sex partners and immigrant communities. With regard to same sex partners, if the intimate partner relationship was not properly identified or did not reach media’s attention, it may not have been reported as a domestic violence incident or fatality. For immigrant communities, domestic violence may go unreported due to a fear of law enforcement, among other reasons. Both of these groups face unique challenges and this report cannot fully capture their experiences.

The scope of this report and its analysis is also limited in instances when the decedent’s reported cause of death fails to mention the domestic violence related circumstances that may have led to a fatality. For instance, up to 57% of homeless women report domestic or sexual violence as the immediate cause of their homelessness and some survivors may die from conditions associated with living on the street (NNEDV, 2014). However, connecting an individual’s death back to their experiences of domestic violence may be challenging and not always immediately apparent. Additionally, it is difficult to document the link between domestic violence victimization and suicide. Some victims may take their own lives to escape the abuse, and that information may never be reported or made public.

Since data is collected primarily through electronic news sources, information from other local and state sources is not reflected in this report. Information such as individuals’ race or ethnicity, or whether there was a protective order in place is not always available. Official sources, such as law enforcement or court records, would improve the quality and accuracy of this annual report and provide additional insight to these incidents.

Key Findings

In 2014, ACESDV tracked 88 domestic violence related incidents, which resulted in 109 known fatalities. Arizona consistently ranks among the states with the highest homicide rates of women murdered by men; in fact, between 2001 and 2013, Arizona was ranked eight times among the top ten states for highest rates of women murdered by men. Most recently, in 2013, Arizona was ranked twelfth in the U.S. for homicide rate among women murdered by men (Violence Policy Institute, 2015). The following tables provide a snapshot of the numbers and characteristics of victims, perpetrators, methods of fatalities, and more. Some data in the tables may still be unknown due to the nature of how data was collected and what may have been reported on the incident.

AGE AND SEX OF DECEASED

The lives of at least 109 people were lost in the context of domestic violence. Of these there were 50 female victims (45.9%) and 59 male victims (54.1%). Minor victims accounted for 22 of the fatalities (20.2%), with 15 of the victims’ ages unknown or unreleased (7 male, 8 female). The under-18 age group had the greatest number of fatalities with 22 (20.2%); 18-29 years followed with 21 (19.3%) fatalities. The age group with the fewest fatalities was 60 and older with 8 (7.3%).

RELATIONSHIP OF PERPETRATOR TO DECEASED

Female Fatalities
In 2014, at least 50 females died in domestic violence related incidents. In contrast to male victims, female victims were most likely to be murdered by a current or former intimate partner. The information obtained showed that:

- 29 were killed by a current or former intimate partner
- 9 were killed by a parent, step-parent, or mother’s boyfriend
- 1 committed suicide after killing her child
- 1 was killed by another family member
- 5 were killed by roommates
- 5 were killed by other/unknown parties

Male Fatalities
In 2014, at least 59 males died in domestic violence related incidents in Arizona. Men comprised 96% (23/24) of all suicides. Additionally, those killed by law enforcement or a sexual competitor/rival were males. Of those:

- 23 total took their own lives
- 14 committed suicide after killing their current or former intimate partner and/or children
- 9 committed suicide after other non-fatal incidents involving current or former intimate partners
- 4 were killed by a current or former intimate/dating partner
- 5 were killed by law enforcement
- 5 were killed by a parent, step-parent, or mother’s boyfriend
- 9 were killed by other family members
- 3 were killed by a sexual competitor/rival
- 3 were bystanders
- 4 were killed by roommates
- 3 were killed by other/unknown parties
VICTIMS KILLED BY PERPETRATORS WHO COMMITTED SUICIDE

Threatening to or attempting to commit suicide is a risk factor associated with increased risk of homicide in violent relationships (Campbell, 2003). Suicides made up 22% of all the domestic violence related fatalities reported for 2014. Of those who committed suicide, 96% (23) were males and 4% (1) were female. There were thirteen incidents of intimate partner homicide-suicide, all of which included male perpetrators who killed their current or former female partners. The other seven incidents of suicide included men who killed themselves after seriously harming their current or former female partners, killing their children or other family members, or engaging with law enforcement.

Perpetrators Who Committed Suicide

- 13 men killed their current or former female partner (wife, girlfriend or fiancé) before committing suicide
- 5 men committed suicide without killing anyone else immediately beforehand
- 2 men killed their children before committing suicide
- 1 man killed his father’s girlfriend before committing suicide
- 1 man killed a law enforcement officer before committing suicide
- 1 woman killed her child before committing suicide

Method of Suicide

- 21 men used a gun to commit suicide
- 2 men drove intentionally into oncoming traffic
- 1 woman committed suicide by an intentional prescription drug overdose
While varying definitions of familicide exist, Dr. Neil Websdale explains it as “the deliberate killing within a relatively short period of time of a current or former spouse or intimate partner and one or more of their children, perhaps followed by the suicide of the perpetrator” (2010). Although there were no known incidents of familicide in Arizona in 2014, compared to Canada, the United States has three times more familicide; compared to Britain, eight times more; and compared to Australia, 15 times more (National Institute of Justice, 2015).
Among the domestic violence related fatalities in Arizona in 2014, 29% (32) were incidents of fatal intimate partner violence, resulting in 47 deaths. Of these:

- 19 incidents were perpetrators who killed their partner
- 13 incidents were perpetrators who killed their partners and committed suicide
  - All 13 of these perpetrators were male.
  - In 1 incident the perpetrator also killed people other than their victim/partner before taking their own life
- Female deaths comprised 62% (29) of all intimate partner fatalities; male deaths 38% (18).

FATALITIES BY METHOD

Domestic Violence and Firearms
Every day in the United States women are killed or severely injured due to the lethal combination of domestic violence and firearms. Abusers use firearms as their primary weapon of choice in domestic violence homicides and third weapon of choice in non-fatal domestic violence assault. When abusers have access to firearms, not only victims’ safety, but their very lives, are in danger.

While severe physical violence, stabbing, and strangulation account for nearly one-fifth of fatalities, firearms continue to be the most commonly used method or weapon in domestic violence fatalities. 60% of all domestic violence fatalities in Arizona in 2014 were the result of a firearm, which follows trends of previous years. Among these fatalities, five perpetrators were shot and killed by law enforcement officers who were responding to a call and one officer died as a result of being shot by a perpetrator.
In 2014, ACESDV partnered with Everytown For Gun Safety (Everytown) to release a new report, “A Census of Domestic Violence Gun Homicides in Arizona”. This report revealed that 62% of women killed by intimate partners in Arizona were shot to death, and the rate of intimate partner gun homicides in Arizona is 45% higher than the national average. This was the first report of its kind in the state and suggests that domestic and intimate partner related homicides in Arizona are, to a significant degree, a problem of gun violence.

“Leading up to many of these shootings there were indications that the shooters posed a risk to their partners: one in seven shooters was federally prohibited from buying and possessing firearms, but many likely had guns as a result of loopholes in Arizona law,” said Ted Alcorn, research director for Everytown. “Every instance of domestic gun violence is devastating to the families and communities involved, but these deaths are not inevitable. We know that domestic gun violence can be reduced by supporting stronger gun laws that help keep guns out of the hands of domestic abusers.”

In total, research identified 105 homicides in Arizona between 2009 and 2013 in which someone was murdered with a firearm by a current or former intimate partner. Because perpetrators often shot additional victims – and more than half killed themselves at the end of the incident – there were a total of 191 shooting deaths.
The following are key findings from the Everytown report:

- Arizona has an elevated rate of domestic gun violence – 45% above the national average. Rates of domestic gun violence in Coconino, Mohave, and Yavapai counties are double the state average.
- A total of 191 people died in the cases examined. In addition to killing their current or former intimate partner, perpetrators also shot 32 other victims – neighbors, friends, and family members – killing 25 of them, including 11 children.
- There were ample indications that the perpetrators posed a risk to their partner. One in seven shooters (13%) was prohibited from possessing firearms due to their criminal history or an active order of protection.
- Offenders under an active order of protection were rarely required to turn in their firearms. Of the perpetrators identified in this census that were under an active order of protection, only one in six of the active orders of protection included a requirement that the shooter turn in his firearms.
FATALITIES BY MONTH

Fatalities occurred in every month of 2014, but the data demonstrates that the highest number of deaths occurred in October (14), followed by September and January (both with 13). In two months were there less than five fatalities – June (2) and November (3). There was an average of over nine domestic violence related fatalities per month (9.08) in Arizona in 2014. In the previous year, there were over ten domestic violence fatalities per month (10.42).

!Month vs Fatalities

FATALITIES BY COUNTY

The data shows that two counties, Maricopa County and Pima County, have the highest number of domestic violence related fatalities while four counties had none reported (Apache County, Greenlee County, Santa Cruz County and Yuma County). Maricopa County accounted for approximately 60% of all domestic violence fatalities in Arizona, with more fatalities than the other fourteen counties combined.

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE FATALITY REVIEW IN ARIZONA

Domestic violence fatality and near fatality review provides a methodical way of exploring and examining domestic homicides and focuses on holding systems accountable and preventing future fatalities. Fatality Review provides an opportunity for a diverse, multi-disciplinary group of professionals and community members to collect information about a case (the parties involved, the relationship, and systemic involvement), to meet on a regular basis and discuss issues of system response, and to make recommendations to improve systems. They operate on a “no-blame, no-shame” principle, and instead acknowledge that an imperfect system sometimes leaves survivors’ needs unmet.
The National Domestic Violence Fatality Review Initiative outlines the underlying objectives that most review teams share:

- Prevent future domestic violence and domestic homicide.
- Provide safer provisions for battered women and their children.
- Hold accountable both the perpetrators of domestic violence and the multiple agencies and organizations that come into contact with the parties.

A.R.S. § 41-198, enacted in 2005, provides confidentiality for the cases reviewed and the local government resolutions enables entities such as law enforcement, prosecution, advocates, defenders, medical personnel, and other professionals to participate in these reviews. The collective knowledge and experience of each team is of great value to the review process. The professionals mentioned above, alongside shelter advocates, offender treatment providers, and others dedicate a tremendous amount of time to the process of fatality review. Fatality review can also enhance a community's coordinated response and many teams have reported that the relationships developed as a result of fatality review have been invaluable and have enhanced coordination among individuals, agencies, and the community as a whole.

ACESDV applauds Arizona’s domestic violence fatality review teams and their ongoing commitment to examining these cases as well as their dedication to improving their communities. By opening various agencies' files and records to investigate what leads up to domestic violence fatalities and near-deaths, we can continue the work of improving system responses to domestic violence in Arizona. Ten of Arizona’s DVFRTs completed case reviews in 2014. Key findings, areas of interest, and recommendations from the completed reviews are summarized below.

City of Phoenix Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team

Case(s) Reviewed

More than nine cases were evaluated before the team chose to focus their review on a near-fatal case of intimate partner violence. This was the first time this team reviewed a near-fatality.

Key Findings

- Consistent with findings from previous reviews, the victim attempted to manage the perpetrator and such efforts became normal in the course of the relationship.
- The National Criminal Information Center (NCIC) system that links registered protection orders to perpetrators’ prohibited possessor status is significantly delayed.
- For small to medium size employers/workplaces included as protected locations in protection orders, it is unlikely that they have the policies in place to provide for the safety of the workforce in these situations.
- An absence or lack of past violence is not necessarily a predictor of future lethality. Paying attention to the perpetrator’s escalation of behavior is equally important to evaluating dangerousness.
- While protection orders are tools that can be used to enhance perpetrator accountability, there remains inherent risks for victims who choose to obtain one. Connecting victims with victim advocates will provide them with education about protection orders, lethality indicators, and safety planning.

Recommendations

- Increase community awareness activities and efforts. The information provided should include the dynamics of domestic violence, resources available to victims, and lethality indicators, as well as address how victims tend to normalize such relationships.
Increase community education for businesses (particularly small to medium in size) and provide tools for employers to develop policies and procedures to address domestic violence and workplace safety, especially in instances when a workplace is protected by a protection order.

Educate victim advocates on lethality assessments and the evaluation of lethality indicators.

Improve the registration system for protection orders.

Increase education for victims on protection orders, including information such as the available of orders, how to maintain an order, and safety planning. Also, provide ongoing and appropriate education for judicial officers and court personnel, family attorneys, and victim advocates in the areas listed above.

Include victim advocates in the early stages of cases to provide victims with information about protection orders and safety planning.

Implementation

The City of Phoenix submitted a grant application that would provide for electronic transfer for protection order data and would allow for real-time data recording. This would increase perpetrator accountability for violations and improve the system’s ability to prohibit the purchase of weapons.

Recommendation Updates from the 2013 Report

Recommendation: Increase community awareness activities regarding the dynamics of domestic violence and the resources available to victims of domestic violence. In addition, the information should address how victims tend to normalize such relationships.

Update: The City of Phoenix’s Roadmap to Excellence has increased domestic violence awareness activities in the community significantly. Information on the dynamics of domestic violence and available resources is provided through these efforts. The Roadmap is a five-year plan and such education and awareness activities will continue.

Recommendation: Education for victim advocates on lethality assessments and evaluating lethality indicators such as financial decline and depression. Education should include information for victim advocates on understanding the value of the victim’s perception of the danger and potential lethality of the relationship.

Update: The Arizona Coalition to End Sexual and Domestic Violence provides education to service providers and victim advocates on lethality indicators and assessments. The City of Phoenix will continue to host this training annually to reach as many individuals as possible.

Recommendation: Increase education for victims on OPs, the criminal justice system, and safety planning.

Update: The Phoenix Family Advocacy Center submitted two grant applications to provide increased education and safety planning for individuals seeking to obtain and serve orders of protection. These grants will increase advocacy services offered at Phoenix Municipal Court and educational videos will be developed for law enforcement, victims seeking orders, and the community at large.

Recommendation: Education for victims on how the criminal justice system works and how to provide for individual and family safety. This education could be provided when Ops are obtained through work with a victim advocate.

Update: If awarded, the grants (mentioned above) will provide opportunities for advocacy services. These services will include education on the criminal justice system and safety planning, and will be provided at Phoenix Municipal Court and when protective orders are served.
Coconino County Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team

Case(s) Reviewed
The team completed one review of a domestic violence fatality. The case involved a perpetrator and victim with long-term mental health and substance abuse problems. The victim and perpetrator had been dating for five weeks and did not have a history of domestic violence. Additionally, the team identified the toll of domestic violence on children.

Key Findings
- The perpetrator never received appropriate treatment for his mental health problems that manifested in early childhood.
- The perpetrator’s criminality was never adequately addressed. The victim also did not receive appropriate treatment for her depression and alcoholism.
- The victim’s children were not supported by tribal police, school officials, or child welfare agents.
- Motel/hotel owners are not educated about violence in their establishments which can create a dangerous environment for residents, visitors, and guests.

Recommendations
- Create a community education program covering the dynamics of domestic violence and resources within the community for both victims and offenders. This educational program should include programming specifically designed to educate and train faith based leaders.
- Adopt a training program, which includes domestic violence policies and protocols, for the hotel/motel management community on how to respond to domestic violence incidents that occur within their establishments. This would include local recognition for completion of the training program.
- Increased funding and coordination for mental health services. This should include training for law enforcement agencies on identifying and addressing the needs of the mentally ill when responding to calls for service, as well as increased coordination between the criminal justice system and mental health service providers. Particular attention should be paid to those with recurring mental health issues who exhibit violent tendencies and connecting these individuals with appropriate services, in addition to incarceration.
- Create a community education program, tailored to the African American community, to dispel myths regarding mental health concerns and provide awareness of mental health services available in the community.
- Provide education to victims of domestic violence regarding the dynamics of abuse and resources available. Particular attention should be paid to those in the criminal justice system as offenders of any crime, as there are a number of victims that become involved in the criminal justice system. The primary focus for training and resources should be provided by the probation department for those victims sentenced to a term of probation.
- Improve awareness of the impact of domestic violence among educational and child safety workers, including increased awareness of the co-occurrence of child abuse and intimate partner abuse and/or homicide.
- Support all the recommendations of the Attorney General’s National Task Force on Children Exposed to Violence (http://www.justice.gov/defendingchildhood/cev-rpt-full.pdf) which emphasize the importance of providing trauma informed care to all children who witness violence in their homes and communities and training educational personnel to recognize and respond to these children.

Implementation
- In 2014, the Flagstaff Police Department and the Coconino County Sheriff’s Office adopt additional reporting forms for domestic violence incidents. Chief Treadway worked with other Arizona police departments, particularly Glendale Police Department, to develop tools reflecting increased knowledge of the dynamics of coercive control as well as the lethal risk represented by strangulation. Officers now conduct a lethality assessment as well as a strangulation assessment when reporting on domestic violence cases. These improvements, also adopted by the Sheriff’s Office and the Page Police Department, provide evidence relevant to processing cases and identifying high risk offenders.

- Flagstaff Medical Center (FMC) now screens all emergency room patients for domestic violence and refers people to Coconino County Victim Witness Services. FMC also has a SANE nurse, who performs forensic strangulation evaluations. The nurse is trained in strangulation examinations and documents evidence as well as providing information and referrals to victims. The Page Hospital is planning to institute strangulation and sexual assault examinations this year.

- The Flagstaff Police Department has also acquired body cameras worn by responding patrol officers, corporals and sergeants. The cameras assist in prosecution by providing visual documentation of the scene, offender conduct and victim injuries and reactions. While it is too early to assess the impact of body cameras on the prosecution of domestic violence, initial evaluations are very positive.

- The team also witnessed increased coordination of mental health and criminal justice services. Police officers receive mental health training on how to protect the public while also assisting people with mental health issues. Law enforcement is also partnering with Northern Arizona Regional Behavioral Health Authority (NARBHA) on several initiatives. The criminal justice system has been educated on the effects of trauma on long-term adjustment and behavior and has responded with specialized treatment efforts. For example, the Coconino County Detention Facility supports the Exodus program, which incorporates trauma informed care. It helps inmates understand their behavior and provides tools for self-regulation. People who graduate from Exodus have a much lower recidivism rate than others. NARBHA also operates a mobile crisis unit and a crisis line to assist people experiencing mental crises. Last year, the Guidance Center opened a crisis unit capable of providing up to four people with 23 hours of care. Previously, such individuals would have typically been on the street.

Cochise County-Sierra Vista Regional Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team

Case(s) Reviewed
The team reviewed a murder suicide. The case involved a female victim who was murdered by her live-in boyfriend. The victim’s boyfriend committed suicide at the same location.

Key Findings
- The perpetrator exhibited signs of paranoia and had a history of drug use and violence.
- Close family of the victim received text messages from the victims that indicated high lethality.
- The victim and perpetrator, whose relationship was less than a year, lived in an isolated, remote location with little law enforcement involvement. The victim either declined advocacy services or was unaware they existed.

Recommendations
- Continue community outreach and awareness efforts that encourage citizens and third parties to report domestic violence on half of victims.
- Continue to offer regional domestic violence training on salient topics in the field.
- Promote domestic violence resources at community events throughout the county.
- Develop consistent domestic violence protocols for “best practices”, implemented regionally.

Implementation
- Promote the “Start By Believing” campaign in the county.
- Continue to provide regional domestic violence training. In 2014, the team provided an eight hour “Advanced Domestic Violence” course for the region. The course was well received; the team was invited to deliver the course in Gila County. Topics for 2015 courses may include verbal tactics and cues, risk assessment, and sexual assault.

- In 2014 and 2015, the team provided resources at two major county events, “National Night Out” and “Take Back the Night”.
- In conjunction with the Cochise Domestic Violence Awareness and Collaboration Team, the team has worked on establishing county wide protocols for best practices in domestic violence. The protocols will be delivered to county stakeholders in 2015.

Team Goals for 2015

- Recruit additional members.
- Review cases from rural areas of the county.

East Valley Police Chiefs Association Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team

Case(s) Reviewed

The team reviewed a murder-suicide, totaling five deceased. The perpetrator was an adult male and the husband/father of the murdered wife/mother and their three children. The perpetrator murdered his family and then committed suicide. This case did not involve a prior documented history of domestic violence.

Key Findings

- There is no requirement or consistent procedure for medical personnel to notify family members of potentially life altering medical conditions.
- Improvements in the communication between the religious community and law enforcement.
- Significant interaction with family court through their family law attorney’s.
- Red flags of lethality and increased risk were evident, or should have been evident to the victim and others around her. Had these red flags been acted upon it may have assisted her in making decisions for her safety and the safety of the children.

Recommendations

- Support increased awareness of domestic violence through Public Service Announcements (PSA) and Social Media.
  - Gear the messaging to include coercive control and power dynamics.
  - Include control of money, job, education, and family contact (other than violence)
- Consistent training with attorneys (Family Law).
  - Consider publication in the monthly Arizona Attorney magazine.
  - Work with the Arizona State Bar requiring Family Law attorneys maintain a domestic violence certification through increased training.
  - Require domestic violence training or practice for lawyers specializing in family law through certification and/or re-certification.
- Support Domestic Violence/ Teen Dating Violence education in the schools through use of non-profit organizations assistance.
  - Expectation of the LRE requirements through the School Resource Officer program.
  - Develop a presentation that can be approved by AZPOST, and require mandatory training. This will develop a consistent message.
  - Create a portal that parents and children can access information.
  - Utilize media resources and social media sources to market these efforts.
The team recommends that the Arizona Attorney General be present at the final meeting of each review session to review the team’s recommendations.

Mohave County Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team
Case(s) Reviewed
The team reviewed a double homicide-suicide, totaling three deceased.

Key Findings
- Family and friends were aware of the abuse but may not have known or provided knowledge of resources to assist the family.
- There was no record of a previous order of protection.
- The victim and perpetrator had been attending counseling with no mention of or further investigation of what agency or private party they were seeking services from.
- The victim had strong religious beliefs.
- The perpetrator’s potential for abuse, violence and/or lethality indicators existed, but may not have been available to due to confidentiality restraints in the medical and counseling field.
- Systems strengths identified by the team included:
  - Employers were quick to respond to seek welfare check due to failure of attendance indicating a level of awareness/education.
  - Law enforcement investigation and written documents were clear and precise with much detail to surroundings and red flags.

Recommendations
- Continue to increase domestic violence awareness and education in the county to include services available in each of the major cities, as well as the outlying areas of the county.
- Continue to have ongoing discussions of how to consolidate and improve efforts to identify red flags and lethality indicators, and to make them available to victims, families, and service providers.
- Plan, develop, and implement a countywide training for faith-based leaders. In the past, the Mohave County Attorney’s Victim Witness and Kingman Aid to Abused People Directors joined efforts to host and facilitate training for faith-based leaders.

Navajo County Domestic Violence Fatality Review Board
Case(s) Reviewed
The case reviewed was a murder-suicide incident that resulted in the death of a victim’s four year old child. The perpetrator committed suicide after murdering the child. There was a history of violence by the perpetrator against the victim. The incident took place while the victim and perpetrator were separated. The victim the victim had obtained an order of protection two months prior to the incident and had filed for divorce two days before the incident.

Key Findings
- The victim had almost no peer, family, or religious support. She also was not aware of any of the professional services that are located throughout the community to help victims of domestic violence.
- When the victim made the decision to leave the relationship, she did make some good safety decisions, like obtaining an order of protection. However, the order of protection was only explained to the victim the day she obtained it and was experiencing personal distress during that time. She lacked the knowledge needed to fully utilize this as a tool, and appeared to feel intimidated by the judicial process.
Training: When the victim did make an attempt to obtain support through her father, she was told to stay in her relationship. It is common for many victims to first reach out to their church and family for support.

Recommendations

- Create a domestic violence brochure with local contact information, risk assessment, and safety planning tips for law enforcement to distribute when responding to an incident:
  - The County Attorney will absorb printing costs and supply the brochures to local law enforcement agencies to hand to domestic violence victims while on scene.
  - White Mountain Safehouse along with Navajo County Victim Services will develop brochure.
- Have an advocate present with victims who are filing for an order of Protection:
  - Develop an order of protection advocate call out card to distribute to all local courts. Winslow Justice Court-Alice’s Place, Holbrook Justice Court-North Country Health Care Domestic Violence Advocate.
  - Snowflake, Show Low, and Pinetop Justice Courts- The White Mountain Safehouse
  - Navajo County Attorney’s Office Victim Services will be the secondary backup for all the courts and will respond to any Superior Court Orders of Protection.

- Provide more training to the following agencies: law Enforcement, probation, medical staff, behavioral health staff, court staff, counselor, teachers, and faith based communities. Utilize the Navajo County Victim’s Rights Symposium as a platform to provide training. Provide a domestic violence training seminar to church clergy. Work with the Arizonan Coalition to End Sexual and Domestic Violence to find trainers who would be free or available to train at a reasonable cost

- Have the symbol (DV) tagged on the end of Navajo County court case numbers to help agencies and victim easily identify when an individual has previous domestic violence charges.

Pima County Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team

Case(s) Reviewed

The team reviewed one homicide. The victim and perpetrator were married and had two children. The perpetrator is currently incarcerated. The team chose this case in order to talk to the perpetrator as part of the review; however, the focus was on the recovery of the minor survivors.

Key Findings

- The victim was a twenty-five year old woman with a history of childhood trauma. As a teenager, the victim recognized that her choice of partners would have a negative impact on her future. While services providers many have recognized her continued need for services, there was no bridge for services between the juvenile and adult systems.
- The victim’s two children were sleeping in one of the apartment bedrooms during the murder of their mother. While there were reports that the children slept through the entire event, the son’s behavior might indicate otherwise. Though the children were eventually connected to services, it was not immediate and it is unclear if the services were trauma specific.

Recommendations

- The Pima County Juvenile Justice system can develop procedures for and linkages to transitional aged youth continued service provision.
Designate a transitional caseworker to develop case plans for 18-year-olds and connect them to appropriate adult services.

Specific procedures are developed for law enforcement and Department of Child Safety (DCS) to connect children who have experienced trauma and loss to evidenced-based services. The protocol should be guided by the principles of the National Child Traumatic Stress Network.

Implementation

- Juvenile Justice Transitional Aged Youth Service Procedures: Pima County Juvenile Court currently distributes a resource guide for 17-18 year olds involved in the court system. While this is a good start, the team believes that transitioning youth need more intervention than this. One strategy is to use the Court Appointed Special Advocate (CASA) program currently active in juvenile court. By training CASAs on transitional programs specific to transitional aged youth, the advocate can take a more active role in ensuring a connection to adult services. The team would also like to explore options with DCS regarding their transitional aged youth programming.

- Protocol for Children Who Experience Traumatic Stress: The team will explore the option of having a CASA volunteer assigned to every child who loses a parent as a result of a domestic violence homicide. (With the understanding that not every domestic violence homicide will result in a court action) Because CASAs are highly trained and have the specific function of addressing the best interest of the child, this individual could be assigned to a child and potentially monitor their needs and progress over time.

- With respect to both recommendations, the team will consult with DCS regarding policy and procedure for transitioning youth as well as children who have experienced a loss of a parent due to domestic violence. The team will work with DCS in a community collaboration to 1) ensure youth transitioning to adulthood are engaged in appropriate social services; and 2) ensure children who have experienced DV homicide trauma receive the appropriate services to cope with and heal from the tragedy.

Case(s) Reviewed
No cases were reviewed in 2014.

West Valley Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team
Case(s) Reviewed
Case 1: A woman was murdered by her on-and-off again boyfriend and his live in girlfriend.

Key Findings
- The perpetrator had numerous prior domestic violence and other violence offenses and had pending charged for aggravated assault on the victim. The victim was due to testify in a few weeks.
- This case uncovered numerous domestic violence victims at the hands of the perpetrator.

Recommendations
- Enhanced communication between courts in regard to batterer intervention programs. Specifically, when an offender commits a new domestic violence crime in a different jurisdiction there needs to be effective communication so that sanctions can be more strictly enforced for the new crime.
More aggressive enforcement of sanctions for non-compliance with batterer intervention programs when reported to the court, not simply re-enrollment in treatment or an extension of the time required in treatment.

Bench Book updating for set standards regarding minimum compliance with offender treatment programs. This should include standardized sanction increases when there is either subsequent reoffending or offenses resulting in injury to the victim. Also, mandate that meeting minimum compliance standards does not qualify for diversion programs and enforce it.

Mandatory Waiver of Client Information forms for offenders convicted of domestic violence crime to allow access to Arizona fatality review teams operating under A.R.S. so that they may have access to the client records including: behavioral health professional assessments, past and current treatment orders, past or current protection orders, and other contacts with law enforcement related to domestic violence.

Case 2: A woman was shot and killed by her ex-boyfriend and father of her daughter.

Key Findings
- The victim and perpetrator had been separated for 3-4 months.
- The perpetrator was believed to be exhibiting stalking behavior and jealousy over the victim’s possible new relationship.
- The perpetrator shot his victim five times at close range, including a shot to the back of the head. Their four year old daughter witnessed the incident and was slightly injured.
- Four months prior to the murder, the victim had obtained an order of protection. The order was later quashed and the judge encouraged the couple to work on things for the sake of the wellbeing of their child.

Recommendations
- Regarding requests for hearings after protective orders have been granted, establish a workgroup to incorporate domestic violence screenings and lethality assessments in the process.
- Bench Book updating for set standards regarding issuing and quashing protective orders.
- Identify opportunities for legislative changes regarding protective order process.
- Enhance education efforts including judicial training and community awareness. Key partners include the Maricopa Association of Governments (MAG) Domestic Violence Council and Arizona Committee on the Impact of Domestic Violence and the Courts (CIDVIC).

Yavapai County Domestic Violence Fatality/Near Fatality Review Team
Case(s) Reviewed
The team reviewed one homicide case involving a perpetrator who had multiple criminal justice contacts, none of which were domestic violence related. The perpetrator also had a significant number of contacts with mental health organizations in Arizona and California.

Key Findings
- The victim and perpetrator had co-dependency issues involving illegal drug use and both avoided available services.
- The perpetrator did not believe he had a mental health illness and did not take the prescribed medication.
- Despite having gone through a substance abuse treatment programs twice, the perpetrator to use illicit drugs.
Recommendations

- A mental health discussion/summit is held with the goal of bringing community stakeholders together to meet, discuss, and find solutions to bridge some of the gaps that can occur in cases involving domestic violence and persons with mental health challenges.

Implementation

- Mental health awareness and educational events were held in the spring of 2015, allowing for greater communication and understanding between community stakeholders such as law enforcement, the behavioral health community, court systems, the veteran's administration, and higher educational organizations.
- Another goal and success of the mental health awareness and educational events was it provided an increase in awareness and knowledge for community members.

Yuma County Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team

Case(s) Reviewed

No cases were reviewed in 2014. Alternatively, the team looked at prior year recommendations to determine if it could contribute to any suggested implementations. In 2013, the team had a key finding that in Yuma County, there was a high percentage of domestic violence calls among law enforcement families. Specifically, it was recommended that law enforcement officers who have been accused of domestic violence should have mandatory psychological evaluations and training from their employer. The Yuma County Sheriff’s Office collaborated with Amberly’s Place to include a video of an actual law enforcement officer who was arrested to illustrate that domestic violence will not receive any courtesy from law enforcement peers or supervisors. The short video was incorporated into a new training to illustrate the impact that domestic violence has on a law enforcement agency. It emphasized the high standards the community and agencies expect from its officers. The training looked at the impact on peers when law enforcement partners missed work for domestic violence reasons, or were at work but had to deal with their children who may miss school, have trouble in school, or other manifestations in children who witness domestic violence. Also, the costs of physical and mental health care associated with domestic violence to an agency were discussed.

Key Findings

- Watching an actual police interview of a law enforcement officer seemed to underscore the point that law enforcement peers will hold their own accountable for domestic violence allegations.
- Law enforcement officers were more receptive to the bigger picture of how domestic violence affects their agencies due to missed days of work, health care related costs to agencies, and the negative impact on the high standards required of law enforcement officers.

Recommendations/Implementation

- The team recommends that trainings consider actual footage of law enforcement holding their own accountable and information on domestic violence’s secondary impact on the law enforcement agency.
AREAS OF INTEREST AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Community Awareness
Nationally, 2014 was a landmark year for domestic violence awareness. On September 8, 2014, a video of Ray Rice, professional football player for the Baltimore Ravens, was released. This video showed Rice knocking out his fiancée in a casino elevator and then dragging her unconscious body out of it. While the public was appalled to see such violence perpetrated by a public sports figure, they also responded by blaming Rice’s fiancée for choosing to remain in a relationship with him. Centering responses on a survivor’s choices rather than a perpetrator’s actions, or victim blaming, is commonplace. The social media storm that followed the release of the video was started by writer and survivor, Beverly Gooden. In crafting her own Twitter response to the victim blaming she was witnessing, Gooden used the hashtag #WhyIStayed and explained why she had stayed with an abusive ex-husband. Both #WhyIStayed, and another hashtag, #WhyILeft, were trending in the U.S. in a matter of days and have continued to receive steady usage. Although Ray Rice is only one of 33 National Football League (NFL) players who were arrested on charges involving domestic violence between January 1, 2012 and September 17, 2014 (SI Wire, 2014), his name and the accompanying video are synonymous with domestic violence. The social media and viral movement have given survivors and their allies a platform to share their voice and it has changed how the public, and the media, talk about domestic violence.

Increasing community awareness of domestic and intimate partner violence continues to be a recurring theme among the DVFRTRTs' recommendations, now and in previous years’ reports. Several teams recommended awareness building and outreach activities to address the dynamics of domestic violence, as well as local services and resources for survivors and those concerned about them. Teams also identified public service announcements (PSAs) and social media as ways to inform and engage communities in learning about domestic violence, coercive control, lethality indicators, and how to get help. Fatality review teams, which operate independently and with the cooperation of a variety of professionals, have limited time and resources to conduct outreach events. Leveraging the expertise and existing resources of team members and community partners, in addition to partnering with ACESDV, may go a long way toward crafting effective public awareness campaigns, increasing community awareness, and reshaping how the public talks about domestic violence.
Mental Health
A common assumption, and myth, is that abuse is caused by a partner’s mental health condition. Abuse and mental illness can coincide; however, it is not what causes the abuse. In fact, there are cases of individuals who have a mental illness and are healthy and supportive partners. Abuse can have serious immediate and long term impact on survivors, including how one sees, understands, and interacts with the world around them. Experts agree that long-lasting exposure to domestic violence can cause physical injury, emotional harm, and mental or psychological trauma. In addition to common physical effects of chronic fatigue, muscle tension, and changes in eating or sleeping patterns, stress resulting from chronic abuse may lead to conditions such as post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), depression, dissociation, and increased anxiety to name a few.

Several teams dedicated time during their reviews to discuss the intersection of mental health and domestic violence. Teams called for increased funding for coordination of mental health services, large-scale community gatherings for stakeholders, increased training for law enforcement, and culturally specific education programs to dispel the myths associated with and stigma surrounding mental health concerns. Again, the teams’ recommendations highlight the need for those interacting with survivors to understand the link between mental health and domestic violence, and how communities can benefit from a trauma informed approach to services. Two teams also emphasized the need for increased coordination between mental health service providers and the criminal justice system, as well as between the courts and offender treatment programs. Like the review teams, working to ensure that those who come into contact with survivors are knowledgeable about mental health and domestic violence, and are also equipped to serve them will remain a priority for ACESDV.

Training and Education
Training on best practices is essential for the effectiveness of professionals and safety of survivors. Nearly every team recommended increased and ongoing training and education – for advocates, law enforcement, business owners, and faith communities, among other groups. Many of the teams included specific examples of who needed to be trained and what type of training they needed. This included, but was not limited to, training for judicial officers and court personnel, family law attorneys, and child welfare workers. Of particular note were specific recommendations that (1) hospitality staff (hotels/motels) receiving training for responding to domestic violence within their establishments, (2) faith-based leaders receiving training for responding to survivors’ disclosures of abuse, and (3) law enforcement officers receive training for responding to domestic violence perpetrated by their colleagues. Additionally, there were recommendations to increase education for survivors on protective orders, the criminal justice system, and support services. ACESDV offers a variety of trainings throughout the year and around the state. In-person trainings and webinars are available to member programs and advocates, as well as to those working in criminal justice, health care, education, child welfare, hospitality, and more.

Protection Orders and Advocates
A protection order is one of many tools and resources that survivors can use when seeking safety. There is no “one size fits all” when it comes to protection orders. Rather, they operate much like lethality assessment, safety planning, and any other work done with survivors in that how we incorporate them in our with survivors must be individualized to meet their specific safety needs. In the course of their reviews, several teams identified recommendations for improving the protection order process. They included: having advocates available to work with survivors throughout the process and identifying legislative changes which can improve the registration system for orders.

Domestic violence and victim advocates are professionals trained to support survivors of intimate partner and other forms of family violence. In addition to being skilled and effective in assisting survivors navigate or leave abusive relationships, they also offer information, emotional support, and help securing resources. Advocates are often times in contact with many community organizations, such as criminal justice or social service agencies, and they work to maintain relationship with them in order to get help or information for survivors. Indeed, advocates play a valuable role insofar that they can identify and understand the needs, resources, perspectives, and culture of each survivor. Several of the DVRFTs identified in their 2014 reports the importance of having advocates in the community and accessible to survivors and professionals alike. More specifically, teams recommended (1) additional training for advocates in the areas of lethality assessment and lethality indicator evaluation, protection orders, and safety planning, and (2) early and ongoing involvement of an advocate for survivors who are seeking protection orders. ACESDV offers training in the areas of safety planning and legal advocacy, and will continue to work with the Order of Protection Task Force to address barriers to obtaining and gaps in the protection order process.

Gun Violence

In an 8-week focus survey on the use of guns in domestic violence situations, the National Domestic Violence Hotline (NDVH) found the “presence of a firearm in an abusive relationship intensifies the fear of abuse victims and escalates the violence directed towards them, regardless of whether or not the survivor is married, dating or being stalked by the abuser” (2014). They also found that 67% of those who completed the survey believed their partner was capable of killing them. Nationally, firearms are the primary weapon utilized by perpetrators in domestic violence homicides (Violence Policy Institute, 2013). Statistics and anecdotal evidence show that domestic violence is more likely to lethal when an abusive partner has access to guns, and is further enhanced when survivors are attempting to leave (Campbell, J.C., Webster, D., Koziol-McLain, J., et al., 2013).

According to research published in the American Journal of Public Health, the presence of a gun in domestic violence situations increases the risk of homicide for women by 500% (NDVH, 2015). Experts agree that the data is clear: access to firearms is a significant risk factor in domestic and intimate partner homicide, and familialicide, because it allows the perpetrator to take action that elevates a dangerous situation to lethal one.

Research shows that keeping firearms out of the hands of perpetrators reduces the risk of homicide (Campbell, J.C., et al., 2003a, 2003b). While state and federal law requires that those convicted of felony domestic violence, qualifying misdemeanor domestic violence, or who are the defendant on an order of protection, be listed as prohibited possessors, perpetrators are often able to still obtain firearms. Furthermore, according to the National Institute of Justice, “states with less restrictive gun control laws have as much as eight times the rate of murder-suicides as those with the most restrictive gun control laws” (2015). Considering that 60% of Arizona’s domestic violence related fatalities involved a firearm, not to mention the countless threats and near-deaths that go unreported, such findings have real-life implications for survivors in the state. While Arizona’s DVRFTs focused their 2014 reports and recommendations on training and education, mental health, and offender treatment, addressing the use of guns in domestic violence remains central to their work.

The findings of the Everytown report suggest Arizona should enact the following laws:

- Require background checks on all gun sales;
- Prohibit all people convicted of domestic violence or currently subject to a final order of protection from possessing guns; and
- Ensure that all domestic abusers who become prohibited from possessing guns turn in the guns they already own.
Several types of fatality review exist in Arizona: domestic violence fatality review, child fatality review, and maternal mortality review. These teams may focus on kinds of deaths, but what they do and their purpose is universal – identify and examine deaths, explore changes in prevention and intervention systems, and develop recommendations for coordinated community response and public policy initiatives, with the goal to ultimately prevent such deaths in the first place. Historically, the state’s fatality review teams have operated independently and only in the past two years has ACESDV explored an informal working relationship with the Arizona Department of Health Services Maternal Mortality Review Subcommittee.

Domestic Violence Fatality Review
Arizona is home to the National Domestic Violence Fatality Review Initiative (NDVFRI), a unique resource center dedicated to domestic violence fatality review. Funded by the Office of Violence Against Women (OVW), NDVFRI provides training and technical assistance to OVW grantees about domestic violence fatality review, and also functions as a clearinghouse for information about developments in the field (www.ndvfri.org).

In 2014, the Montana Domestic Violence Fatality Review Commission created their second team, the nation’s first Native American Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team (NADVFRT). After ten years of working in Indian Country, the need for such a team became clear. Guided by a “no blame, no shame” philosophy, the new team conducted two reviews in their first year and included their findings in the Commission’s biennial report to the Montana State Legislature. The Native American reviews included a homicide-suicide and a homicide in which the perpetrator was female. The NADVFRT identified a need for its team members to learn about historical trauma as well as factors that make domestic violence in Indian Country different than in other areas.

Trends identified by the Montana Domestic Violence Fatality Review Commission:
- After several years in which there were no Native American intimate partner homicide (IPH) deaths, 2014 brought two. Native Americans remain victims of intimate partner homicide at a disproportionate rate in our state. While constituting approximately 7% of the state’s population, they make up 13% of IPH events and 11% of... intimate partner victims. As in past Indian Country deaths, both the victim and perpetrator were Native American.

- In non-Native IPH, females are the perpetrator in 22% of the killings. In Native American IPH, females are the killers 58% of the time.
- In non-Native, female perpetrated IPH a knife is used 37% of the time. In Native American IPH a knife is used 86% of the time.
- Firearms are used in 75% of non-Native killings. In reservation communities firearms are used only 25% of the time.
- All Native American IPH have involved both Native victims and perpetrators.
- There have been no Native American familicides.
- Statewide, firearms continue to be the most frequently used weapons.
- Substance abuse, including prescription drugs, was a significant factor in several of the killings.
- Most of IPH deaths this biennium occurred West of Billings. Twenty-seven percent of the deaths took place in the Flathead.
- In the majority of incidents, family, friends and/or coworkers were aware of violence within the home but did not intervene.
- Three of the perpetrators had significant criminal histories.
- These killings resulted in significant trauma to minor children who witnessed the killing or dealt with its immediate aftermath. Resources provided to the children varied tremendously.
- Use of social media/digital technology is becoming much more common in perpetrating coercive control (e.g. cyber stalking). Additionally, it is being used more and more to solve DV crimes and in the creation of safety plans.

Recommendations from the Montana Domestic Violence Fatality Review Commission:

- Provide regular training to public assistance case managers on the good cause exemption for domestic violence victims, particularly related to child support enforcement.
- Continue the collaboration and joint trainings between Montana’s Department of Justice, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the U.S. Attorney’s Office and the MT—WY Tribal Judges Association.
- Expand the state’s Crime Victim Compensation Program to increase the reimbursement rate for funeral expenses. The $3,500 figure has not been raised since 1995 and its limitation can place a financial burden on families of those killed in intimate partner homicides.
- Increase the use of trauma-based services among those working with domestic violence victims, perpetrators and children who grow up in violent homes.
- Pass legislation focused on strangulation, either creating a new stand-alone statute or enhancing existing domestic violence statutes.
- Institute a statewide child death review team modeled on the adult death review teams.
- Expand the use of danger/lethality assessments by law enforcement, victim advocates, medical personnel and criminal justice staff.
- Conduct trainings for tribal and non-tribal judges, law enforcement, and health professionals on lethality assessments and domestic violence screenings so those interacting with victims can better assess the risks associated with intimate partner violence. Take steps to educate all Montanans on factors unique to Indian Country in order to better understand how domestic violence is different in Indian Country. Examples include historical trauma, sexual abuse, and concentrated poverty.
• Strengthen Indian Country multi-disciplinary team efforts in staffing and intervening in family violence. Develop culturally appropriate family violence intervention protocols that can be utilized by tribal programs.

Child Fatality Review (from www.dhs.gov)
Arizona’s Child Fatality Review was created in 1993 (A.R.S. § 36-342, 36-3501-4) and data collection began in 1994. Reviews of child deaths are completed by 12 local child fatality teams located throughout Arizona. The state team provides oversight to the local teams, produces an annual report summarizing review findings, and makes recommendations regarding the prevention of child deaths. These recommendations have been used to educate communities, initiate legislative action, and develop prevention programs. The Arizona Department of Health Services provides professional and administrative support to the state and local teams and analyzes review data. The goal of the Child Fatality Review is to reduce preventable child fatalities through systematic, multidisciplinary, multi-agency, and multi-modality reviews of child fatalities in Arizona. This is accomplished through interdisciplinary training and community-based prevention education and through data-driven recommendations for legislation and public policy.

Maternal Mortality Review (from www.dhs.gov)
In April of 2011, the Arizona Legislature changed the child fatality statute to charge this State with the responsibility to "evaluate the incidence and causes of maternal fatalities in this State." Maternal fatalities associated with pregnancy include the death of a woman while she is pregnant or within a year of her pregnancy. This led to the establishment of Arizona’s first Maternal Mortality Review Subcommittee. This Subcommittee operates under the already established State Team whose responsibility it is to oversee the Child Fatality Review Program. Once this change went into effect on July 1, 2011, the Maternal Mortality Review Subcommittee began reviewing cases, determining preventability and making recommendations for action. The Maternal Mortality Review Subcommittee is made up of members from professionals in the field including OB/GYNs, perinatologists, directors of nursing, maternal-fetal medicine specialists, public health professionals, domestic violence specialists, behavioral health specialists, and representatives from Arizona’s tribal nations.
